On December 18, USDA/FSIS updated its export library, indicating that U.S. fresh and frozen broiler meat is now eligible for export to South Korea (Korea banned U.S. poultry in January 2015 due to HPAI). This opening may be temporary, however, as Korea will likely ban U.S. product again in the event of another HPAI finding. Longer-term, USDA seeks to enter into a regionalization protocol with Korea to allow for trade in poultry from regions of the United States not affected by HPAI. In 2014, Korea was a $123 million market for U.S. poultry. For more details of the eligible U.S. poultry products for entry into South Korea, please refer to the USDA/FSIS Export Library update:

http://www.fsis.usda.gov/wps/portal/fsis/topics/international-affairs/exporting-products/export-library-requirements-by-country/Korea